Severity predictor test

Researchers from the University of Kent and Goethe University in Frankfurt believe that a test could show before a person catches it how badly they will suffer from Covid-19. A study found that cells infected with Covid-19 had more transferrin, a glycoprotein that causes blood clotting. Transferrin increases with age and is higher in men; older people and men are at higher risk of severe symptoms.