Summit pulls in 300 for online event

The Kent and Medway Business Summit proved a hit after being forced to switch online. More than 300 delegates attended the event for five hours of networking and expert comment.

Organised by the University of Kent in partnership with the Federation of Small Businesses, Institute of Directors and Locate in Kent, the digital event brought together key policy makers with businesses large and small to create and share a vision for the region.

The university's Professor Marian Garcia: "The summit provided a platform at this pivotal time for businesses to come together with policy makers to create a shared vision for Kent and Medway. It was inspiring to hear the work local authorities and agencies are doing."

The IoD's Dr Roger Barker, top, and tech pioneer, Rana el Kaliouby, both appeared
